

Hands-On Therapy Replaces Major Surgery: A Remarkable Advance in Health Care

A discovery that is both life-saving and life-creating was born from the story of a devoted couple's struggle and triumph over debilitating pain.

Hundreds of women diagnosed infertile conceived naturally after medical treatments failed; patients with life-threatening bowel obstructions are avoiding surgery – all through a new hands-on therapy that feels like a deep massage.

Childhood friends from the age of three, physical therapist Belinda and Larry Wurn married in their 30s. They struggled when Belinda's cancer treatment, including surgery and massive doses of radiation therapy, created internal adhesions. These internal scars caused her debilitating pain when she walked, moved or even breathed.

After being told that nothing could be done and Belinda would have to live with the pain, the couple embarked upon a quest to relieve Belinda's pain. Over time, they discovered and developed a non-surgical therapy that successfully treats common but serious conditions for which physicians offer no cure, or treat only with invasive surgery or pain-masking drugs.

This hands-on therapy can feel like a deep massage, but has been shown in peer-reviewed journals to be an effective natural treatment for the most common causes of female infertility, including blocked fallopian tubes, endometriosis, PCOS and high FSH (common in women over 35). Published clinical case studies show its effectiveness delaying and preventing small bowel obstructions – a life-threatening condition in which surgical repair can cause more problems. Because surgery is recognized as the primary cause of bowel obstructions, having a non-surgical treatment saves many patients from surgery, and literally saves lives.

In short, this therapy offers an effective alternative to adhesion-related chronic pain, female infertility, and bowel obstruction, without the risks or costs of surgery – and often delivering better results than surgery. It has provided healing and hope for thousands of individuals who have undergone invasive surgery and costly medication without results.

Studies published in respected medical journals show that the therapy:

- Improved fertility in women, including opening blocked fallopian tubes;
- Decreased pelvic and endometriosis pain in most women;
- Significantly decreased intercourse pain – a problem that affects 50% of all U.S. women;
